Lost

Sometimes, we just find ourselves lost in some recollections,
Just like I did, looking at these empty chairs,
Reminiscing the joy of affection of some beautiful souls.

I try to take control over my thoughts, utilising some distractions,
But suddenly, everything reminds me of them;
Suddenly, I'm imagining reliving all the moments we're together fond of,
Suddenly, I lost the taste in food,
Suddenly, I have tears in my eyes,
Suddenly, they stopped responding to all the surroundings.

Then, recovering a little, I go for a walk,
But my feet start following the same paths we used to walk through;
I follow them, praising the nature, the light,
All the decorations, all the pleasing vibrations.

And then, someone asks me about them.
The assurance it had on its face
That I'll be aware of their know-abouts
Reminded me that we're one, we're no different.

And then I'm lost again.

And then I’m lost again,

In the same thoughts, in the same souls;

And I don’t complain,

’Cause I'm lost again.

And in the quiet, their voices still linger,

Blooming as flowers in shadow;

Struggling between the memories and the silence,

They stay.

So do I.